Conventionally, as a method of modulating information from a digital device to the form of an analog signal, a data (transmitter) conversion method is used. In the data conversion method, the technique is disclosed, in which information from a digital device is transmitted to an analog device as differential signals between two channels, and the differential signals are converted into analog signals by two transistors connected in a differential amplifier manner (see, for example, Patent Document 1). Patent Document 1: Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2011-111669Q: Google Website Optimizer - Optimize to mobile and desktop equally? I just set up my first site for Google Website Optimizer, and it seems like the site can be optimized for desktop and mobile. I am wondering if I need to set the test to be optimized for mobile and desktop equally or if I can let it optimize for each one separately? It seems like GWO has a lot of logic to make sure you get one targeted test vs. the other. A: Yes, you can test in 2 different sessions - a mobile and a desktop session. This can be especially useful if you track 3 different metrics (click, purchase, conversion) - you can then easily track if your conversions went up, down or stayed the same. For example, you could: test for conversion test for click test for purchase in 2 separate groups test mobile session (mobile version) test desktop session (desktop version) You can also test a promotion, so that you can assess: is the conversion the same, higher or lower in the mobile
