Only the highest-level layer(s) will be visible in the Layers panel. If you want to work on a specific part of another layer, create a new group and make the part of the layer you want visible the only visible group. You can also create groups from other groups; in effect, you can make a copy of any group. A second new feature is that you can click and drag images, shapes, layer groups, or even links to other files from your desktop to Photoshop. Once they are there, you can make changes directly in Photoshop without having to quit and open that file in Photoshop. You can even move the file to another location on your drive. As with other image formats, you need to quit Photoshop to save the changes made. Adobe's new nondestructive tools are very powerful.
