For pixel-level editing, there's a grid of nine boxes with the main tools inside each one handling different types of tasks. The tool box makes it simple to control the movement of the cursor and to activate the various tools, and right-clicking shows a basic list of options for each tool. The "Live" tool makes it simple to switch between snapping different presets - the single tool resize tool, the split-column tool, the camera tool, and so on. The "Layer" panel holds all the tools and settings related to the individual layers, while the selection tools live in the "Toolbox". The Layer panel is where you work on the individual layers, while the "Toolbox" is where you handle more complex adjustments, like positioning the cursor and working with groups of pixels. The pixel-level tools are in the square toolbox quadrant, while the bigger selection tools live in the bottom-right.
